Profile

I am an experienced archive researcher and producer with over 25 years' experience. My knowledge of stills and footage along with the technical copyright, cost and implications is comprehensive. I have worked in most areas of production, including documentary, entertainment, music, news drama, current affairs sport and children's television. I have extensive contacts for both domestic and international sources of material.

Previous to working in Production I worked for 4 years for BBC Information and Archives (1997 - 2001). This gave me a solid grounding in the working of footage libraries which is invaluable when working on productions.

From December 2018 to August 2020, I was engaged as the Content Manager for the footage library Framepool. The role involved negotiation of representation deals with filmmakers worldwide. Originally founded in Germany Framepool is particularly strong in archive of mid-20th century Germany and has an extensive natural history catalogue. This position enabled me to further develop my contacts knowledge and understanding the Archive industry, especially at the international level.

I find archive research a fascinating area to work in. I enjoy finding archive that has not been seen for many years, and bringing new perspectives to a subject or story.

Whether you are looking for someone to oversee a large archive-based series, research a one-off show or need a small amount of archive to boost your production, I am able to help you get the best possible archive for your budget and time frame.
